Learned counsel for the petitioner submits that it is possible for the counsel to produce the petitioner in this court at any time. This means that petitioner is not in custody and he can move about at his own whims. The special leave petition is filed seemingly against an order which granted him bail on certain conditions. The only grievance of the petitioner is that conditions are so onerous that he cannot comply with them. Still he is outside the jail according to the learned counsel as counsel is able to produce him in this Court.

In the above situation it is unnecessary for us to consider his grievance in this special leave petition. It is accordingly dismissed.
